WEB-BASED DISSEMINATION EFFORTS

Working with a team of graduate students, I developed the pioneering web site, "Windows on Urban Poverty" (<http://www.urbanpoverty.net>), an interactive mapping tool providing easy access to neighborhood-level maps of poverty and basic demographic characteristics, based on census data from 1970 to 2000. Development of this web site was funded in part by The Brookings Institution. This tool is provided free of any charge as a public service to students, faculty, community groups, city planners, journalists and others who have an interest in neighborhood change and urban development. Urbanpoverty.net has been a featured web site by both the "The Scout Report" and "EconData," two services that highlight interesting and useful web sites.

3. Courses taught at University of Texas at Dallas

Graduate Program in Political Economy (POEC):

Descriptive and Inferential Statistics in the Social Sciences. Required course for doctoral candidates in Public Policy and Political Economy and students seeking Masters in Public Affairs, Applied Economics, Applied Sociology, and GIS. Covers probability, descriptive, and inferential statistics, and provides an introduction to linear regression.

Advanced Regression Analysis in the Social Sciences. Covers the Ordinary Least Squares (OLS) regression model in detail, with an emphasis on structuring models to test social and economic hypotheses. Required course for doctoral candidates in Public Policy and Political Economy and Masters in GIS students.

Categorical and Limited Dependent Variables. Course covers a variety of empirical methods used when OLS would be inappropriate, including logit and probit models for binary, ordinal, and polytomous dependent variables; models for truncated and censored variables; and Poisson regression and other models for count data.

Proseminar in Quantitative Methods. This course is designed to assist students in preparing doctoral candidates in Political Economy to take the Preliminary Examination in Methods. The course integrates materials from several quantitative methods courses as well as Research Design and Program Evaluation.

Domestic Social Policies. An overview of social policy in the United States, with an emphasis on current controversies and reform efforts. Required for students in the Human Resources concentration of the Political Economy program.

Undergraduate Programs in Economics and/or Sociology:

Principles of Microeconomics
Intermediate Microeconomics
Tools for Economists
Poverty and Unemployment
Social Welfare Policy

4. Courses taught at John F. Kennedy School of Government, Harvard University, to students pursuing masters in public policy, public administration, and political economy.

Advanced Quantitative Methods. Advanced section of the Master in Public Policy (MPP) core course, intended for those with strong quantitative skills and those interested in pursuing doctoral degrees in public policy.

Quantitative Methods and Empirical Analysis. One of four sections of a core course in the MPP program. Participated in a fundamental redesign of the course and the development of innovative cases and teaching materials.
