Edith O’Donnell Institute of Art History Newsletter

Report of the Director

After a splendid opening party for the new headquarters of the Edith O’Donnell Institute of Art History in the Edith O’Donnell Arts and Technology Building at the University of Texas at Dallas in May, we scattered for summers of research and writing to return to a fall brimming with new life. Gary Cunningham’s design for the UT Dallas offices has proven wonderfully generous, and we have welcomed three of our four O’Donnell Research Fellows and six Graduate Research Fellows to their newly outfitted carrels.

Meanwhile, during the summer, work proceeded apace for the Institute’s new headquarters next to Mayer Library and across from the board room on the second floor of the DMA’s Hamon building. This project is designed by Buchanan Architecture and will be ready for fellows and graduate students in the fall. Stay tuned for an opening date.

We have also welcomed two new members of the team-- our financial guru and comptroller Lisa McClain, who started in August, and our new consultant for development, Lucy Buchanan, who has relocated from San Francisco to Dallas to help us continue to thrive in the metroplex.

My great challenge of the fall involved not only completing the recruiting process for chairs in Conservation Science and Islamic Art History, but also in introducing the brilliant undergraduate students of UT Dallas to the University’s newest research efforts in Art History. With the capable help of one of our O’Donnell Research Fellows, James Rodriquez, a UT Dallas alumnus and a Yale Ph.D. student, more than 250 freshmen and sophomores, most of whom are declared majors in science, are taking a course designed to introduce them to art history. The principal text book for the course, Gateways to Art, is co-authored by UT Dallas art history Ph.D. student Debra DeWitte, and the principle of the course is to use works of art in the permanent collections of DFW art museums as portals to a global history of art. Hopefully, after a few years during which this course will be regularly offered, our science, mathematics,
Greetings from the Assistant Director

Greetings from the newly finished O’Donnell Institute offices at UT Dallas! If you haven’t already, we hope you’ll visit us soon. Come Fall, we’ll have the pleasure of welcoming you to our satellite offices at the Dallas Museum of Art, slated for completion in November. Also this fall we will launch our new website, where you will find more information about the work of the Institute, our research projects, our nascent Master’s program, affiliated scholars, programs, and other news.

In the meantime, we are gearing up to welcome ten 2015-2016 research fellows to the O’Donnell Institute, where they will pursue projects on topics ranging from Byzantine icons to nineteenth-century landscape. They are introduced in this edition of the newsletter, and we hope you will have the chance to meet them and engage with their work.

In late October The Wilcox Space will open the first of a two-part installation called John Wilcox: Diptychs and Polyptychs. Ben Lima and I are co-curating the show and will co-author the accompanying catalogue. We look forward to welcoming you to see the first installation this Fall, and the second in the Spring.

Assistant Director Sarah Kozlowski has created a wonderful program of scholarly gatherings for our faculty, fellows, and graduate students for the fall term, and our partnership with both the DMA and UTA are ramping up.

It is difficult to believe that, as little as a year ago, we were little more than a dream of our founding donor, Edith O’Donnell. We are doing our very best to live up to the high expectations that her generous endowment has given us. Two of our essential art history faculty at UT Dallas, Associate Professors Mark Rosen and Charissa Terranova, are on research leaves this year, and we can hardly wait to welcome them back to a newly invigorated Edith O’Donnell Institute of Art History with manuscripts for their two new books in hand!

In December the Meadows Museum and the O’Donnell Institute will convene a symposium to coincide with the exhibition Treasures from the House of Alba: 500 Years of Art and Collecting. The symposium, Alba: Lives and Afterlives of a Collection, will bring together distinguished scholars for a trio of keynote lectures, followed by an afternoon of “object biographies” presented by art historians in Dallas-Fort Worth. See page four below for details.

Looking ahead to the Spring semester, in conjunction with the upcoming show Jackson Pollock: Blind Spots the Dallas Museum of Art and the O’Donnell Institute will convene a scholars’ day for which a small group of distinguished guests will join area scholars and artists for a viewing of the exhibition with curator Gavin Delahunty, followed by an informal scholars’ colloquium in the O’Donnell Institute’s new satellite offices at the DMA. And in April, the O’Donnell Institute and UTD’s Ackerman Center for Holocaust Studies will host a two-day symposium called The School of London: Diaspora and Pictorial Trauma in Auerbach, Bacon, Freud, Kitaj, and Kossoff. The event will comprise lectures by visiting scholars, a scholars’ colloquium at the DMA, and an open forum at CentralTrak.

Meadows Museum / O’Donnell Institute Symposium

Alba: Lives and Afterlives of a Collection
December 4, 2015

To coincide with the groundbreaking exhibition Treasures from the House of Alba: 500 Years of Art and Collecting (September 11, 2015 – January 3, 2016), a public symposium at the Meadows Museum will bring together established and emerging scholars for discussion and debate on a selection of masterpieces from the collection of the Alba family. The morning session will be devoted to three keynote lectures that will narrate a story of the life and afterlife of the Alba collection, and raise broader questions about parallel collections throughout Europe. The first lecture will examine the dispersal of the Alba collection in the nineteenth century, the second will investigate the political appropriation of the collection during the Spanish Civil War, and the third will address conservation issues pertaining to specific objects. The afternoon session will take place in the exhibition galleries where six speakers will present “object biographies,” unfolding the stories of individual works on view in the exhibition. A break for lunch will follow the morning session, and the symposium will close with a reception for attendees. FREE; no registration required. Space is limited and seating is on a first-come, first-served basis. For more information, call 214.768.4677. Alba: Lives and Afterlives of a Collection is co-organized by the Meadows Museum and The Edith O’Donnell Institute of Art History.

Field Reports

The Bonnie Pitman Education Endowment to Do Something New Fund:

Beverly and Donald S. Freeman, longtime members and supporters of the DMA including Beverly’s more than three decades as a valued DMA Docent, honored former DMA Director Bonnie Pitman with the establishment of The Bonnie Pitman Education Endowment to Do Something New fund, which was announced at a surprise party for Pitman in May. The $1.5 million gift will benefit the DMA’s education department allowing for the creation of programs inspired by Pitman's Do Something New™ Practice. “My deepest thanks to Bev and Don Freeman for this honor and the amazing gift of the Do Something New Endowment to support the creative work of the education programs at the DMA to design innovative and collaborative programs engaging visitors in looking at the collections in new ways,” said Pitman, the Institute's Distinguished Scholar in Residence. “It is an honor to have my passion for the DMA's collections and education programs recognized in such a tangible way through this endowment.”

Going Up

The first 25 works from the impressive Rose-Asenbaum Collection of modern studio jewelry are now on view in Form/Unformed: Design from 1960 to the Present in the Museum's Tower Gallery. The group of over 700 pieces of jewelry entered the collection earlier this year and features more than 150 acclaimed artists from across the globe. The collection is named for Inge Asenbaum, a celebrated Viennese gallerist, and for Deedie Potter Rose in recognition of the gift of this exemplary group of jewelry.

At the end of September, the DMA will celebrate the reopening of the Arts of Africa gallery after the completion of the first redesign of the space in nearly 20 years. The newly reconfigured gallery will include a brighter atmosphere and a new approach to viewing work from the Museum’s acclaimed African art collection. The project, which was overseen by Senior Curator Roslyn Adele Walker, features approximately 200 works from the collection, including work which has never been on view before including a pair of Fulani six-inch hammered gold earrings. Research for the reinstallation project, which was sponsored by the Texas Fund for Curatorial Research, began in 2011.
Art Acquisitions

Two acquisitions separated by nearly 200 centuries entered the DMA’s collection this summer. Curator Anne Bromberg purchased at auction in June a marble head of Herakles, the Greek hero the Romans called Hercules, from the late 1st century A.D. and which is set upon an unrelated bust from the mid-2nd century A.D. This ensemble was composed by the 18th-century French sculptor Lambert-Sigisbert Adam (1700–59), who created sculptures for King Louis XV of France and Frederick the Great of Prussia. “As a pastiche of two antiquities rendered by a master sculptor of the rococo period, this work offers lessons about Greek religion, Roman military commemoration, and the taste and flourishes of 18th-century artistry,” noted DMA Director Max Anderson.

In August, the Museum debuted a new acquisition in the American galleries that highlights the work of Henrietta Shore (1880–1963), an artist who made a significant contribution in the development of American modernism. While she and her work were held in high regard, by the 1940s, both had fallen into obscurity. Fortunately, according to DMA Associate Curator Sue Canterbury, the artist is now undergoing rediscovery, as well as a long-overdue reassessment of her impact on American art of the 20th century. Waterfall, c. 1922 is a remarkable product from one of the most innovative periods of Shore's long career, when she visually interpreted the natural world into its most essential and abbreviated forms. These “semi-abstractions,” as she called them, were an attempt to convey in a symbolic way the underlying spiritual forces she sensed in nature rather than a literal transcription of the visual phenomena she observed. “In Waterfall, pure line and the juxtaposition of positive and negative shapes laid down with the sheer application of pigment are the means the artist employed to render visible the dynamic power of the eternal,” noted Canterbury. “Color is the emotional key she wielded to unlock the visual impact of the whole.” When Shore's semi-abstractions debuted in a New York gallery in January of 1923, they were widely discussed by critics, who immediately and positively compared them with works by Georgia O’Keeffe.

New to the Bookshelf

Arriving in November, The Wittgenstein Vitrine: Modern Opulence in Vienna weaves together a fascinating portrait of the monumental silver and gemstone-encrusted cabinet that is one of the most important and complex works produced by Austria's Wiener Werkstätte. Acquired by the DMA in 2013, the vitrine is currently the subject of a Conservation Gallery exhibition. In this forthcoming publication, former DMA Senior Curator Kevin W. Tucker examines its stylistic origins and context, the powerful Wittgenstein family, and Vienna during its apogee of artistic ferment. DMA Associated Conservator of Objects Fran Baas details the fascinating eight-month process of conserving the cabinet, revealing construction details unseen since its original assembly. This book is the only English-language publication detailing the work and biography of the vitrine’s designer, Carl Otto Czeschka (1878–1960).
Debra DeWitte

Debra DeWitte's research on the exhibition of drawings will appear in The Paris Fine Art Salon/Le Salon, 1791-1881 (French Studies of the Eighteenth and Nineteenth Centuries), edited by James Kearns and Alister Mill (October 2015). This volume contains a selection of papers from a conference held in Exeter (September 2013) on the subject of the Salon, the yearly government-sponsored exhibition for art in Paris. DeWitte's work analyzes the drawings, which includes pastels, charcoalss, and watercolors, that were exhibited in the Parisian Salon from 1863-1881. This understudied area has not been previously considered in part due to the perceived inferior nature of drawings and in part due to the dearth of images of the drawings themselves. While DeWitte has discovered photographs of approximately fifty of the drawings, an understanding of the additional 10,000 drawings that were exhibited during these years was possible largely due to the application of data analytics. Through analysis of the Salon catalogs and reviews, DeWitte explores the types and quantity of drawings exhibited, the reputations and gender of the artists, and the reception of the drawings.

Also in October of 2015, the second edition of DeWitte's Gateways to Art, a textbook for the introduction to the visual arts, will be published by Thames & Hudson. The first edition of Gateways to Art was praised for its flexibility, inclusion of global and contemporary art, and use of thematic approaches. The textbook was designed as a gateway for various approaches to the study of art: formal analysis, the making of art, historical and social context, and thematic comparisons.

Beth S. Wright

I am particularly interested in how Romantic artists addressed the challenge of visualizing literature. Eugène Delacroix, a voracious and insightful reader and an adept author in many genres as well as a brilliant visual artist, did so during a time in which both modern literature and modern art refused to remain within the constraints of Aristotelian unity of action, widening their focus beyond a unique hero's physically visible act and probed subjective and fluctuating states of mind. While other artists simply illustrating selected episodes from a literary text, Delacroix succeeded in creating both great literary art which satisfied traditional standards and great modern art true to modern literature.
This innovative art required spectators as well as artists to engage in what Delacroix called “the work of the reader”: active imaginative participation throughout the author’s narrative. I recently published an article in Word & Image in which I discussed a suite of lithographs in which Romantic artists (Delacroix among them) demonstrated a sophisticated referencing to multiple narrative points. In a forthcoming essay chapter I examine several of Delacroix’s paintings and graphic works inspired by texts by Scott and Byron which capture the full richness of the narrative’s expository arc, the author’s development of character and use of foreshadowing incident. He makes it possible for viewers to (as he wrote) “grasp the thread that binds … together” more than one episode and solicits their own “mental pictures” – seeing what cannot be seen and seeing an event from many viewpoints (physical, temperamental, class-oriented). Delacroix’s virtuosity and insight were recognized at the time by those as innovative as he in their own spheres. In 1863 Baudelaire described Delacroix’s approach to painting as being so informed by his knowledge of the text that he “wrote the canvas.” My presentation at an international symposium on painting and narrative held at the University of Manchester will be published in early 2016: Beth S. Wright, “Delacroix and ‘The Work of the Reader,’” in Peter Cooke and Nina Lübbren, eds., Painting and Narrative in France from Poussin to Gauguin (Ashgate, 2016).

Mary Vaccaro

In addition to a Faculty Development Leave from the University at Texas-Arlington, I held a research appointment as the Lila Wallace-Reader’s Digest Visiting Professor at Villa I Tatti-The Harvard University Center for Renaissance Studies in Florence (Spring 2015). This period of study allowed me to deepen my first-hand knowledge of drawings by Ludovico Carracci (1555-1619) and his younger cousins Agostino (1557-1602) and Annibale (1560-1609).

Towards the end of the 16th century, the trio established an influential art academy in their native town of Bologna and famously took pride in working together, declaring “ella è de’ Carracci: l’abbiamo fatta tutti noi” [“it’s by the Carracci, we all made it”] when asked about their authorship of frescoes in a local palace (Palazzo Magnani, ca. 1590). The task of separating their respective styles remains one of the most difficult and contentious problems in art history. I decided nonetheless to confront this challenge, because, several years ago, with the support of Professor Rick Brettell and the Texas Fund for Curatorial Research, I discovered a group of unpublished drawings in the Musée des Beaux-Arts, Besançon, that I was able to identify as preparatory studies by Annibale for a later project (Farnese Palace, Rome, ca. 1595-1608). Over the course of the past months, my initial fascination with Annibale, generally regarded as the most famous and talented of the Carracci, developed into a more nuanced appreciation of his cousin and especially his brother, as well as of the limits of connoisseurship.

I spent the majority of my research time in the Gabinetto dei Disegni e delle Stampe degli Uffizi, where I first undertook a survey of 16th- and early 17th-century Bolognese draftsmen—from Pelligrino Tibaldi (1527-1596) to Elisabetta Sirani (1638-1665)—to familiarize myself with the regional and individual styles. (The majority of my research to date involves 16th-century draftsmen in nearby Parma, whose works I similarly began to study in the GDSU during my year-long junior fellowship at Villa I Tatti in 1998-99.) Then, I systematically examined all of the drawings that are catalogued under each of the three Carracci. The sustained approach led to exciting discoveries. Using transmitted light (i.e., a portable light-table), I discerned previously undetected studies on the back of several drawings that were glued down onto mounts, which Maurizio Boni (GDSU paper conservator) subsequently detached to reveal the “new” drawings. As I developed a better sense of how each of the Carracci draws, I was able to re-attribute and/or understand better their works on paper: for example, a sheet identified nearly 50 years ago by Donald Posner as a preparatory study made by Annibale for Agostino to paint is instead, as I demonstrate, more likely to be by Agostino.

I was invited to present this preliminary research at a symposium on Drawing and Invention at the Morgan Library, in April, and a seminar at the Kunsthistorisches Institut in Florenz, in June. I have already written one related article (submitted to/accepted Master Drawings) and intend to explore the material in other essays for publication. Moreover, on the basis of my expertise of Old Master drawings, Marzia Faietti (GDSU director) has asked me to co-curate an exhibition with her and Samuel Vitali (a Swiss scholar and Carracci expert at the Kunsthistorisches Institut) on the Carracci holdings in the GDSU, scheduled to take place at the Uffizi in 2018.

Jennifer Way

At the University of North Texas, this fall Jennifer Way is publishing her essay, “The Liminal Collection: Vietnamese Handicraft at the Smithsonian,” in a theme-based issue about collecting in Verge: Studies in Global Asias (University of Minnesota Press). She continues to work on her book project, Politics of Vietnamese handicraft: diplomacy and domestication in belonging to the American Free World, 1955-1961, inquiring how a major American State Department aid program politicized Vietnamese handicraft in light of American Cold War anxieties and domesticated its makers and objects to appeal to American business and the middle class. In regard to teaching, staff from Smithsonian Archives, Metropolitan Museum of Art, The Willem de Kooning Foundation, and Museum of the American Arts and Crafts Movement will share their professional insights with her art history methods students. Building on topics she recently taught—Politics of Belonging, Visual Culture of Refugee and Migrant, and Politics of Exhibitions—this semester Jennifer is teaching Suffering and Questions of Art as a graduate art history seminar.

Nancy Cohen Israel

Nancy Cohen Israel has been invited by the Texas Sculpture Association to participate in this year’s Pecha Kucha program on Sunday, September 27 at the Nasher Sculpture Center. In this unique program, each of the ten speakers will have 20 seconds to discuss 20 slides of their choosing. The event will be from 1-3 pm in the auditorium.

Israel also looks forward to presenting “Highlights of Netherlandish Art from the Alba Collection” on Friday, October 30 at the Meadows Museum. In this gallery talk, beginning at 12:15, she will take a closer look at some of extraordinary Dutch and Flemish work in the landmark exhibition Treasures from the House of Alba: 500 Years of Art and Collecting.

“Gathered Leaves” by Alec Soth

The Department of Art + Art History at The University of Texas at Arlington is pleased to announce the First Annual Arlington Camera Lecture Series sponsored by Arlington Camera. The series launches at 7 p.m. Wednesday, Oct. 21, in room 148 of the Fine Arts Building, 700 Greek Row Drive. The event features Alec Soth, a Minneapolis-based photographer known for his photographs and many publications. He will discuss his newest project, “Gathered Leaves”, in conversation with his friend and colleague Anne Wilkes Tucker.

Soth's photographs have been featured in numerous solo and group exhibitions, including the 2004 Whitney and São Paulo Biennials. Soth's first monograph, Sleeping by the Mississippi, was published by Steidl in 2004 to critical acclaim. Since then Soth has published NIAGARA (2006), Fashion Magazine (2007) Dog Days, Bogotá (2007) The Last Days of W (2008), and Broken Manual (2010). In 2008, a large survey exhibition of Soth's work was exhibited at Jeu de Paume in Paris and Fotomuseum Winterthur in Switzerland. The Walker Art Center produced a large survey exhibition of Soth's work entitled From Here To There in 2010 and since that time Soth has been the recipient of numerous fellowships and awards, including the Guggenheim Fellowship (2013).

Ad Astra Lecture Series

As part of the Ad Astra lecture series, the EODIAH and ATC Colloquia are hosting Meredith Tromble, San Francisco artist and Associate Professor of Interdisciplinary Studies, September 24, 2015 in ATC 3.605 at 5 pm. Her talk, “Remixing Art History with the Dream Vortex (Interactive 3-D Changes Everything),” presents the interactive digital art installation Dream Vortex 5.0 in context with some of its surprising precursors in art. Viewing art history as a vital counterweight to techno-utopian visions of the digital future, Tromble uses the Dream Vortex to start conversations about collective identity, the meaning of “realism” in the digital age, and what our past can and cannot tell us about our future.

Charissa N. Terranova will be presenting “The Gestalt, Then and Now: Between Organismic and Genomic Approaches to Aesthetic Theory” in the NeoLife venue of the Society of Literature, Science, and the Arts meeting in Perth, Australia, October 1-3. The talk focuses on the writings of the theoretical biologist Ludwig von Bertalanffy and theoretical physicist Evelyn Fox Keller in order to tease out the role of the Gestalt within aesthetic theory based on complex living systems.

Terranova will be conducting a panel/roundtable discussion among the curators of Aurora, the biennial public light, kinetic, and light art in Dallas, on Wednesday October 14 at the Nasher Sculpture Center. The title of the panel is “Media Art beyond the Digital Divide.”

Terranova is curating an exhibition title “Chirality,” based on the biological concept of “handedness.” The term names a property of asymmetry important in several branches of science. The word chirality is derived from the Greek, χεῖρ (kheir), “hand”, a familiar chiral object. An object or a system is chiral if it is distinguishable from its mirror image; that is, it cannot be superposed onto it. Artists in the exhibition include Ellen Levy, Luke Harnden, Trent Straughan, Allen and Michael Fleming, and Jeff Gibbons. The show opens Saturday October 24 at Grey Matters Gallery. A panel discussion with the artists on “Chirality” will be held at the gallery October 29.

Terranova is co-chairing with San Francisco-based artist Meredith Tromble the panel “In the Shadow of DARPA: Re-evaluating Postwar Avant-gardes,” at the Society for Literature, Science, and the Arts in Houston, November 12-15. As part of the panel, Terranova will present, “Geometric Abstraction in the Dustbin of History, or, How Neo-Constructivism, Op Art, and New Tendencies Fell Into the Penumbra of the Consumerist Military Industrial Complex.”

The Modern Art Museum of Fort Worth Presents

Kehinde Wiley: A New Republic
September 20, 2015-January 10, 2016

Kehinde Wiley: A New Republic will be on view to the public at the Modern Art Museum of Fort Worth from September 20, 2015, through January 10, 2016. This exhibition is organized by the Brooklyn Museum and Eugenie Tsai, the John and Barbara Vogelstein Curator of Contemporary Art at the Brooklyn Museum. Special exhibitions are included in general Museum admission: $10 for adults; $4 for seniors (60+) and students with identification; free for children 12 and under; free for Modern members.
Kehinde Wiley: A New Republic is an overview highlighting the range of the artist's prolific 14-year career and comprising approximately 60 works. The exhibition begins with early examples of paintings inspired by Wiley's observations of street life in Harlem; these images of African-American men mark the onset of his focused exploration of the male figure. In subsequent work, Wiley further examines the European tradition of portraiture, taking specific paintings by renowned masters such as Titian, Van Dyck, and Manet and replacing the historical subjects with contemporary, young black men sporting fashionable urban gear. These likenesses are set against ornate, decorative backgrounds on large canvases - part of Wiley's signature style - in order to raise issues of class in addition to race and gender. A New Republic also includes a selection from the artist's ongoing World Stage project, examples of his bronze busts, and a chapel-like structure that showcases his new stained-glass "paintings."

Self-Taught Genius: Treasures from the American Folk Art Museum

Self-Taught Genius: Treasures from the American Folk Art Museum explores the "self-taught" artist as an elastic and enduring phenomenon with powerful and profound implications that have changed over time. More than 100 works of art are on view in this groundbreaking exhibition that highlights the roles of folk and self-taught artists as figures who are central to the shared history of America and whose contributions to the national conversation are paramount. Self-Taught Genius features masterpieces in a variety of forms including textiles and needlework, ceramics, sculptural and carved figures, drawings, paintings, furniture, and much more, dating from the eighteenth century to the present.
