Master in Public Affairs (MPA)

The MPA is a professional diploma designed to prepare students to build competencies and develop creative solutions for challenges in finance, leadership, human resource and project management. The degree will prepare students for carrying out administrative and leadership responsibilities in government and nonprofit settings. The specific outcome objectives for students who graduate with the MPA degree are:

- An understanding of the philosophical, theoretical and legal foundations of public management, policymaking and leadership in government and nonprofit settings.
- Proficiency in organizational and decision analysis, research and evaluation practice, and quantitative and qualitative techniques.
- Sound preparation for advanced study aimed at research centers.
- Mastery of persuasive written and oral communication.

Prerequisites
While there are no specific prerequisites required for any MPA course, students who lack background in particular areas may be advised or required to take preparatory courses. In particular, students without a background or experience in American political institutions and policymaking, mathematics and micro computing may be required to develop proficiency in these areas before being admitted into certain courses. Leveling courses will not count toward the MPA degree.

Non-degree Graduate Certificates
Students who complete one of the Public Affairs graduate certificates can count those hours toward the MPA degree.

Deadline
Students are admitted for the fall, spring, and summer terms. For official UT Dallas deadlines, visit www.utdallas.edu/enroll/apply/fees.php.
