

Staff photos

A board at UT-Dallas, ready for the university's chess team.

Campus stars playing chess

Re: "Grandmasters of the game — Small colleges are making a name for themselves by becoming chess powerhouses, says Luke Mullins. And UTD is at the forefront," last Sunday Points.

I love the idea of giving good chess players a full scholarship to college! This is reasonable, because colleges these days have only been recognizing students that play a certain sport, such as football.

Students need to be recognized for their own special talents, because not all of us share the same qualities. Ray Robson could live a successful life, thanks to the education he could get from all the offers he is receiving from colleges — especially since he is only 13 years old.

Maybe more elementary schools and middle schools should have chess clubs to teach students about making decisions on the game board — and in the game of life.

*Rosa Flores, senior;
Bishop Lynch High School, Dallas*