Guidelines: Examination fields should be broadly conceived research and teaching fields rather than narrow topics. They may complement but may not substantively overlap or duplicate one another. Doctoral students in Humanities must present fields distributed over at least two of the three areas (HUAS, HUHI, HUSL) of the program. Of these, at least one field must examine an issue or topic over a period of 200 years or more. Normally the faculty member examining a field is attached formally to the program area in which it falls. Exceptions to these rules occur only by petition to and approval of the Associate Dean for Graduate Studies.

Bibliographies: Within the semester in which this form is approved, the student must submit the initial bibliographies for the fields, each of which all committee members must approve.
