Purpose
The law governing the Federal Student Aid programs is based on the premise that the family is the first source of your support. The law provides several criteria that indicate whether you are to be considered independent of your parents when determining your eligibility for financial aid. These criteria are indicated on the FAFSA. Federal laws and regulations give a campus financial aid administrator (FAA) the authority to determine a student is independent on a case-by-case basis for students with special circumstances. The regulations specifically prohibit the FAA from using any of the following as the reason for the use of this discretion: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • A parent’s refusal to contribute to your education. • Your parents are unwilling to provide information needed to complete the FAFSA or the verification process. • Your parents do not provide you with financial support and do not list you as a dependent on their taxes. • You have been supporting yourself financially. If a college, university or school has decided to process your application as an independent student the decision does not apply to any other school. Each school must reach this decision on their own. Additionally, this determination must be made annually with the processing of each FAFSA. NOTE: The decision of the campus Financial Aid Administrator is final. It cannot be appealed to the U.S. Department of Education.
