REMEMBRANCES OF University Faculty, Staff, and Friends

EDWARD M. ACKERMAN, 1928–2018
Edward M. Ackerman, whose generous support and vision built the foundation of the Ackerman Center for Holocaust Studies at UT Dallas, died in the early morning of Tuesday, February 6, 2018, at his home in Dallas. He was honored by the University’s Board of Regents in 2014 with the Gifford K. Johnson Community Leadership Award.

Richard Benyon said, “Mr. Ackerman was a dear friend, a hero, a leader, and a voice of reason.” He added: “He was an ardent supporter of the University Alumni Remembrance Project.”

CLENTON G. WINDSOR, PhD, July 31, 2016, Plano, Texas. After earning a master’s in psychometric psychology from Texas Woman’s University, he opened a private practice in Plano. He worked as a forensic psychologist in criminal and civil cases.

JOHN GEORGE, 1927–2017
John George, manager for the University’s print and copy services, died in February at the age of 89. Reporter monitored numerous students, including those in San Francisco, the first UT Dallas alumna to win the Alex Prize.

“Dr. Ackerman was a founding member of the American Experience Foundation. The first donor to the Foundation, he was a true leader in every way,” said Dr. Chris Rench, UT’s director of alumni relations and development.

“A true outdoorsman in every sense of the word, he was a leader in the field of programs for Holocaust survivors,” said Dr. Edward S. Herman, director of the Ackerman Center.

The Center was established in 2000 as a research arm in 1965 from the University’s Cleanroom Research Laboratory, which was established in 1965, the first UT Dallas alumna to win the Alex Prize.

“Dr. Ackerman was a founding member of the American Experience Foundation. The first donor to the Foundation, he was a true leader in every way,” said Dr. Chris Rench, UT’s director of alumni relations and development.

“A true outdoorsman in every sense of the word, he was a leader in the field of programs for Holocaust survivors,” said Dr. Edward S. Herman, director of the Ackerman Center.

“The Center was established in 2000 as a research arm in 1965 from the University’s Cleanroom Research Laboratory, which was established in 1965, the first UT Dallas alumna to win the Alex Prize.

“Dr. Ackerman was a founding member of the American Experience Foundation. The first donor to the Foundation, he was a true leader in every way,” said Dr. Chris Rench, UT’s director of alumni relations and development.

“A true outdoorsman in every sense of the word, he was a leader in the field of programs for Holocaust survivors,” said Dr. Edward S. Herman, director of the Ackerman Center.

The Center was established in 2000 as a research arm in 1965 from the University’s Cleanroom Research Laboratory, which was established in 1965, the first UT Dallas alumna to win the Alex Prize.

“It is a terrible loss for our community. Dr. Ackerman was a leader and a role model for all of us,” said Dr. Karen D. Wunderlich, executive director of the Ackerman Center.

“Dr. Ackerman was a founding member of the American Experience Foundation. The first donor to the Foundation, he was a true leader in every way,” said Dr. Chris Rench, UT’s director of alumni relations and development.

“A true outdoorsman in every sense of the word, he was a leader in the field of programs for Holocaust survivors,” said Dr. Edward S. Herman, director of the Ackerman Center.

The Center was established in 2000 as a research arm in 1965 from the University’s Cleanroom Research Laboratory, which was established in 1965, the first UT Dallas alumna to win the Alex Prize.

“It is a terrible loss for our community. Dr. Ackerman was a leader and a role model for all of us,” said Dr. Karen D. Wunderlich, executive director of the Ackerman Center.

“Dr. Ackerman was a founding member of the American Experience Foundation. The first donor to the Foundation, he was a true leader in every way,” said Dr. Chris Rench, UT’s director of alumni relations and development.

“A true outdoorsman in every sense of the word, he was a leader in the field of programs for Holocaust survivors,” said Dr. Edward S. Herman, director of the Ackerman Center.

The Center was established in 2000 as a research arm in 1965 from the University’s Cleanroom Research Laboratory, which was established in 1965, the first UT Dallas alumna to win the Alex Prize.

“It is a terrible loss for our community. Dr. Ackerman was a leader and a role model for all of us,” said Dr. Karen D. Wunderlich, executive director of the Ackerman Center.

“Dr. Ackerman was a founding member of the American Experience Foundation. The first donor to the Foundation, he was a true leader in every way,” said Dr. Chris Rench, UT’s director of alumni relations and development.

“A true outdoorsman in every sense of the word, he was a leader in the field of programs for Holocaust survivors,” said Dr. Edward S. Herman, director of the Ackerman Center.

The Center was established in 2000 as a research arm in 1965 from the University’s Cleanroom Research Laboratory, which was established in 1965, the first UT Dallas alumna to win the Alex Prize.

“It is a terrible loss for our community. Dr. Ackerman was a leader and a role model for all of us,” said Dr. Karen D. Wunderlich, executive director of the Ackerman Center.

“Dr. Ackerman was a founding member of the American Experience Foundation. The first donor to the Foundation, he was a true leader in every way,” said Dr. Chris Rench, UT’s director of alumni relations and development.

“A true outdoorsman in every sense of the word, he was a leader in the field of programs for Holocaust survivors,” said Dr. Edward S. Herman, director of the Ackerman Center.

The Center was established in 2000 as a research arm in 1965 from the University’s Cleanroom Research Laboratory, which was established in 1965, the first UT Dallas alumna to win the Alex Prize.

“It is a terrible loss for our community. Dr. Ackerman was a leader and a role model for all of us,” said Dr. Karen D. Wunderlich, executive director of the Ackerman Center.

“Dr. Ackerman was a founding member of the American Experience Foundation. The first donor to the Foundation, he was a true leader in every way,” said Dr. Chris Rench, UT’s director of alumni relations and development.

“A true outdoorsman in every sense of the word, he was a leader in the field of programs for Holocaust survivors,” said Dr. Edward S. Herman, director of the Ackerman Center.

The Center was established in 2000 as a research arm in 1965 from the University’s Cleanroom Research Laboratory, which was established in 1965, the first UT Dallas alumna to win the Alex Prize.

“It is a terrible loss for our community. Dr. Ackerman was a leader and a role model for all of us,” said Dr. Karen D. Wunderlich, executive director of the Ackerman Center.

“Dr. Ackerman was a founding member of the American Experience Foundation. The first donor to the Foundation, he was a true leader in every way,” said Dr. Chris Rench, UT’s director of alumni relations and development.

“A true outdoorsman in every sense of the word, he was a leader in the field of programs for Holocaust survivors,” said Dr. Edward S. Herman, director of the Ackerman Center.

The Center was established in 2000 as a research arm in 1965 from the University’s Cleanroom Research Laboratory, which was established in 1965, the first UT Dallas alumna to win the Alex Prize.

“It is a terrible loss for our community. Dr. Ackerman was a leader and a role model for all of us,” said Dr. Karen D. Wunderlich, executive director of the Ackerman Center.

“Dr. Ackerman was a founding member of the American Experience Foundation. The first donor to the Foundation, he was a true leader in every way,” said Dr. Chris Rench, UT’s director of alumni relations and development.

“A true outdoorsman in every sense of the word, he was a leader in the field of programs for Holocaust survivors,” said Dr. Edward S. Herman, director of the Ackerman Center.

The Center was established in 2000 as a research arm in 1965 from the University’s Cleanroom Research Laboratory, which was established in 1965, the first UT Dallas alumna to win the Alex Prize.

“It is a terrible loss for our community. Dr. Ackerman was a leader and a role model for all of us,” said Dr. Karen D. Wunderlich, executive director of the Ackerman Center.

“Dr. Ackerman was a founding member of the American Experience Foundation. The first donor to the Foundation, he was a true leader in every way,” said Dr. Chris Rench, UT’s director of alumni relations and development.

“A true outdoorsman in every sense of the word, he was a leader in the field of programs for Holocaust survivors,” said Dr. Edward S. Herman, director of the Ackerman Center.

The Center was established in 2000 as a research arm in 1965 from the University’s Cleanroom Research Laboratory, which was established in 1965, the first UT Dallas alumna to win the Alex Prize.

“It is a terrible loss for our community. Dr. Ackerman was a leader and a role model for all of us,” said Dr. Karen D. Wunderlich, executive director of the Ackerman Center.

“Dr. Ackerman was a founding member of the American Experience Foundation. The first donor to the Foundation, he was a true leader in every way,” said Dr. Chris Rench, UT’s director of alumni relations and development.

“A true outdoorsman in every sense of the word, he was a leader in the field of programs for Holocaust survivors,” said Dr. Edward S. Herman, director of the Ackerman Center.

The Center was established in 2000 as a research arm in 1965 from the University’s Cleanroom Research Laboratory, which was established in 1965, the first UT Dallas alumna to win the Alex Prize.